“Let focus on behavior” - How often have we been in an IEP or 504 Meeting and someone suggested that we do just that. Maybe you suggested it yourself. Simply put, the behavior might fall into 3 basic categories: Good, Bad, or Indifferent. Most of the time, if the behavior is good, we don’t spend much time focusing on it. Perhaps we should; there may be clues that would help us with the bad or the indifferent.

Our 16th conference will include topics to help us learn how to shape behavior; reward the good, improve the bad, and motivate the indifferent. We are currently recruiting speakers who may want to share their expertise. Unfortunately, we will only have a few spots open and the only compensation we can offer is a free lunch AND the thanks you’ll receive from helping families. And, of course, our gratitude. Please contact the Family Resource Center if you’d like your presentation considered for our agenda. All agenda decisions will be made by August 15th.

It’s not too soon to register. Conference updates will be posted on our website over the summer. We expect this to be the last newsletter prior to the conference. You can register by phone or send an email to the contact address posted on our website. Someone will call you to confirm your reservation and collect more information. You can also mail or fax the reservation form on the back of the newsletter. There is a $10 conference fee which includes a free lunch. Don’t forget our Silent Auction. A limited number of hardship waivers will be available.

Inglés Language Estudiantes tienen derecho a igual acceso a la educación

Bajo el Título VI de la Ley de Derechos Civiles (Título VI) de 1964 y la Ley de Igualdad de Oportunidades Educativas (EEOA) de 1974, las escuelas públicas tienen que asegurarse de que los estudiantes aprendices del inglés puedan participar de forma significativa y equitativa en los programas educativos.

El Departamento de Educación (ED) y el Departamento de Justicia (DOJ) han publicado una guía para recordar a las agencias estatales de educación (las SEA), a los distritos escolares públicos y a las escuelas públicas de su obligación legal de garantizar que los estudiantes aprendices del inglés puedan participar de forma significativa y equitativa en los programas educativos.

Las SEA también tienen obligaciones legales hacia los estudiantes aprendices del inglés y los padres con dominio limitado del inglés (LEP). La guía está disponible en: <http://www.ed.gov/ocr/ellresources.html>.

Si tiene preguntas, desea obtener información adicional, o cree que una escuela está violando la ley federal:

- Puede visitar el sitio web de la Oficina para Derechos Civiles (OCR) del Departamento de Educación en www.ed.gov/ocr o contacte a OCR al (800) 421-3481 (TDD: 800-877-8339) o escriba a ocr@ed.gov. Working on Working Memory

School is out for the summer & for most kids this means a lot of fun and free time. It can also be a great time to improve a few skills and establish new habits to get the next school year off to a better start.

If your child has ADHD or other learning difficulties he/she may experience challenges with working memory. Working memory is the part of our short-term memory that helps us to process what is currently going on in our surroundings and/or our own thoughts. Tracy Packiam Alloway, PhD, a lead member of a government-funded study, reports “One of the most consistent findings in research studies is that students with ADHD have poor working memory, particularly when they have to remember visual information, such as graphs or images...students with ADHD were 4 times more likely to have working memory problems compared to their peers without attention problems. This has serious impact on their learning. As a result of working memory problems, students with ADHD can struggle in all areas of learning. They can also find it difficult to cope with simple tasks in the classroom, such as following instructions, keeping track of where they need to be, remembering to do their assignments, and so on.”

Having difficulties with working memory can create problems in learning, problems following instructions, and can make a child feel like they don't know how to complete tasks. Even if a child does not have a co-occurring learning disability, working memory problems can make it appear that way since their grades may be very poor. Terry Matlen, ACSW, a psychotherapist and coach who specializes in ADHD, states: “They're more easily distracted by outside noise and their own thoughts. They're typically disorganized. For instance, they forget to bring assignments home or take completed homework to school, leading to lower grades” She adds that these children tend to manage their time poorly and procrastinate, which usually results in submitting work that's well below their capabilities.

But this doesn't mean that children with ADHD are doomed to bad grades or poor school performance. As a parent or caregiver, you can do a lot to help your child manage their symptoms and do well in school. Although medication has been found to help some children with working memory issues, typical-

Wheelchair Basketball Tournament

The MUSC Physical Therapy Class of 2016 is hosting the 4th Annual “Shots with a Spin” Wheelchair Basketball Tournament benefiting Achieving Wheelchair Equality (AWE.)

AWE is a local organization that provides home modifications, extracurricular activities, and social support to improve the quality of life for those individuals who use wheelchairs. AWE sponsors several low country wheelchair sports including wheelchair racing, weightlifting, and the North Charleston Hurricanes, a local Wheelchair Basketball team. This tournament not only serves as a major fundraiser for AWE, but also as an educational experience for those living with disabilities that may be unaware of all of the recreational opportunities available to them. This year's Shots with a Spin will include the competitive basketball tournament, kid's carnivals, silent auctions, information stands, adaptive auto show, recreational adaptations, and silent auction.

Remembering Michael

Michael Lewis, the beloved son of Shawnetta Lewis, was an amazing little boy who loved baseball, super heroes and his family. He was a miracle league athlete and precious to all who knew him. Sadly, he passed away on May 3rd at only 9 years old. Shawnetta is a member of the Family Resource Center Family, providing peer parent mentoring to parents of children with disabilities. We share her grief and echo her words, as she released a white dove into flight at Michael’s funeral: Farewell, Farewell, Fly Home....

Special Swim Night

Want more Star Wars? The second week of Star Wars camp is different from the first, so your little Padawan can enjoy two weeks of Star Wars adventures!

August 3 – 7 - Campy Camp

It's all about the great outdoors and pretend PLAY at this camp! We're turning our classroom into a forest and setting up camp. We'll build tents and make

PTRC Welcomes New Mentors & Bids a Fond Farewell

The Family Resource Center (FRC) feels a little less complete these days now that Michael Filippone is no longer a Peer Parent Mentor with our PTRC. We wish Michael the best of luck in Colorado as he settles in his new home. Michael is a tireless advocate for his son and he passed that skill on to all he knew. He has been a valuable asset to our program and was one of our very first Mentors, starting with us in 2000. During that time he shared his expertise with hundreds of families in the tricounty. We know children with disabilities benefited from the information and training he provided to parents over the last 15 years. While we were sad to see him move on, we know that there will be parents of children with disabilities whose lives he will continue to touch.

So, how are we managing these days without Michael? We've contracted with several new Mentors to fill the void. Our Mentors receive specialized training each year from Dr. Mitch Yell, professor at the University of South Carolina. Mentors help parents understand their rights & responsibilities & provide technical assistance with the special education process. The FRC welcomes Allyson Kneib, Chelsea Mikel, and Tracie Hayward to the PTRC. All three bring valuable talents to our team and are already mentoring parents in our service area. These ladies are welcomed by our staff (Susan Clark, Page Miller, & Bev McCarty), along with the other Peer Parent Mentors currently working with families: Melinda Hawk, Ruth Burrows Harkleroad, Sharla Gould, Alice Kennedy, Shawnetta Lewis, and Mary Snyder.

Alice in Wonderland Dance Party

People with special needs, their families, and caregivers are invited down the rabbit hole for an Alice in Wonderland themed dance party! The book is stuffed with food, so the Queen of Hearts will be sure to have plenty of snacks and refreshments.

ly, the effects only last while medication is being taken. There is support for other methods of improving working memory skills without medication, as well. According to John M. Grohol, Psy.D. of PsychCentral.com, there are things you can do with your child to help improve working memory. Some of the things he recommends include:

1. Define & Discuss what "Paying Attention" Looks Like.

This discussion can help children learn what it actually means to pay attention. Tell your child to look at the adult/teacher when they are speaking, only speak when it is his/her turn to talk, only talk about the topic at hand, be still except when movement is needed to complete a task. Paying attention may look different depending on the activity. Repeat this discussion many times & reinforce improvements in paying attention. First, assess how long your child can pay attention, such as by timing how long he can follow the "rules" of paying attention that you have discussed with him while he completes a homework assignment. Then, provide a reward for paying attention for that long. Then, provide rewards for slightly longer amounts of time paying attention. Visual reminders may help with the "rules".

2. Practice Remembering Larger Bits of Information.

Kids with working memory difficulties are likely to hold fewer items in their working memory. Kids with these difficulties are likely to lose what is in their working memory more quickly unless they can process it and move the information into long-term memory. To help kids improve their working memory, play silly games like creating a list of tasks to complete and see how many they can remember to do. Parents can play, too. The tasks should only require a single action. You can also make the tasks funny. For example tell your child to: clap your hands, pick up that blanket, wiggle your body, spin around, etc.

3. Play Memory Training Games. Playing frequent memory games may help to some extent. Consider playing games such as Simon, the card game War, Uno, Concentration, or any of the many other games or apps that require memory and attention.

These are just a few suggestions. For the full article visit <http://pro.psychcentral.com/child-therapist/2015/05/3-effective-strategies-for-improving-working-memory-in-kids-with-adhd/>
